NEW QUESTION: 1

Peter works as a Software Developer for PatSoluTech Inc. He creates a .NET assembly using Visual Studio .NET. He wants to use this assembly in multiple .NET applications on a local computer. He decides to deploy the assembly into the global assembly cache (GAC). What will he do to accomplish the task? Each correct answer represents a complete solution. Choose two.

- A. Register the assembly within the GAC using Regasm.exe.
- B. Give a strong name to the assembly.
- C. Register the assembly within the GAC using Gacutil.exe.
- D. Set the public attribute for the assembly.

Answer: B,C

NEW QUESTION: 2

A receiving host has failed to receive all of the segments that it should acknowledge. What can the host do to improve the reliability of this communication session?

- A. start a new session using UDP
- B. use a different source port for the session
- C. obtain a new IP address from the DHCP server
- D. decrease the sequence number
- E. decrease the window size

Answer: E

Explanation:

The Window bit in the header determines the number of segments that can be sent at a time. This is done to avoid overwhelming the destination. At the start of the session the window is small but it increases over time. The destination host can also decrease the window to slow down the flow. Hence the window is called the sliding window.

When the source has sent the number of segments allowed by the window, it cannot send any further segments till an acknowledgement is received from the destination. On networks with high error rates or issues, decreasing the window size can result in more reliable transmission, as the receiver will need to acknowledge fewer segments. With a large window size, the sender will need to resend all the frames if a single one is not received by the receiver.
