source 192.168.161.2 tunnel destination 209.165.201.1 tunnel-mode dynamic

Answer Explanation: The configuration of mGRE allows a tunnel to have multiple destinations. The configuration of mGRE on one side of a tunnel does not have any relation to the tunnel properties that might exist at the exit points. This means that an mGRE tunnel on the hub may connect to a p2p tunnel on the branch. Conversely, a p2p GRE tunnel may connect to an mGRE tunnel. The distinguishing feature between an mGRE interface and a p2p GRE interface is the tunnel destination. An mGRE interface does not have a configured destination. Instead the GRE tunnel is configured with the command `tunnel mode gre multipoint`. This command is used instead of the `tunnel destination x.x.x.x` found with p2p GRE tunnels. Besides allowing for multiple destinations, an mGRE tunnel requires NHRP to resolve the tunnel endpoints. Note, tunnel interfaces by default are point-to-point (p-p) using GRE encapsulation, effectively they have the `tunnel mode gre` command, which is not seen in the configuration because it is the default. The mGRE configuration is as follows:

!interface Tunnel0 bandwidth 1536 ip address 10.62.1.10 255.255.255.0 tunnel source Serial0/0 tunnel mode gre multipoint
