NEW QUESTION: 3

What is true for real depreciation areas?

- A. They are set to always post to the G/L.
- B. They can have values calculated from combining other depreciation areas values.
- C. Each can be assigned multiple currency types.
- D. You can post transactions to them independently.

Answer: D

Explanation:

In Asset Accounting transactions that aren't integrated with AP/AR, you can choose to post them to specific depreciation areas. In addition, if a depreciation area isn't valid for an individual asset, you can deactivate it. The asset values then won't be updated for the deactivated area even for external transactions (an expense or loss account is debited to balance the technical clearing account in such cases). A real depreciation area doesn't have to post to the G/L; each area is assigned a specific currency type. Calculating values from other areas is the exact reason for having derived (not real) depreciation areas.
